** Wooden tomb-figures are rare. Those from the Aurel Stein Collection, lent by the Government of India to the Chinese Exhibition, 1936 (Catalogue 627, 628), date from the 7th Century A.D. and are much stiffer in style than the present examples. A minor detail of technique shared by these and the Stein examples (especially a fragmentary piece in the British Museum) is the treatment of the dappling or piebald markings. The free carving of the present specimens, which seems to be of a hitherto unrecorded type, points to a 9th Century date, by which time, especially in fresco-painting, a fluent bravura style had come to prevail under the influence of Wu Tao-tzu.
